Al Gore: Mr. Snider, what is the name of your fan club?

DS: The fan club is called ME SMF fans of twisted sister.

AG: And what does “SMF” stand for when it is spelled out?

DS: It stands for the sick mother f*cking fans of twisted sister.

AG: Is this a Christian group?

DS: I do not believe profanity has anything to do with Christianity. Thank you.

AG: You say your song “Under the Blade” is about surgery. Have you ever had surgery with your hands tied and your legs strapped?

DS: The song was written about my guitar player Eddie Ojeda. He was having polyps removed from his throat and he was very fearful of the operation.

AG: Is there a reference to the hospital in the song?

DS: No, there is not. But there is not a reference to a woman, sado-masochism or — well, bondage, yes.

AG: There is a reference to someone whose hands are tied down and whose legs are strapped down, and he is going under the blade to be cut.

AG: So it is not really a wild leap of the imagination to jump to the conclusion that the song is about something other than surgery and hospitals, neither of which are mentioned in the song?

DS: Yes, there is.

DS: No, it is not a wild jump. And I think I said at one part that songs always a reason to put their own imagination, experiences and dreams into the lyrics people can interpret it in many ways.

The idiots are self-regarding consumer slaves, oblivious to the parody of their uniform individuality. They sculpt their hair to casual perfection, they wear their waistbands below their balls. They gargle in to handheld tint machines about that cool e-mail of the woman being hummed by a wolf. Their cool friend made it: he's an idiot too. Welcome to the age of stupidity. Hail the rise of the idiots.
